media release

Westoil has changed its trading name after the recent merge of the Westoil and Reliance Petroleum BP fuel distributor businesses. The new business which will trade under Reliance Petroleum is the face of BP in the regional markets it operates in and will be able to offer an even better range of services but with the same local focus.

Highly regarded BP distributors, Westoil and Reliance Petroleum, have joined forces to now operate under the name Reliance Petroleum creating an extensive network of bulk fuel depots, lubricant facilities, service stations and delivery vehicles across Australia.

A Reliance Petroleum spokesman said the aim was to become Australia's premier fuel distributor and regional convenience retailer providing enhanced local service.

"We want to ensure that we can meet our customers' every need, with our people on the ground in a position to understand the issues affecting local businesses and communities," he said.

"Reliance Petroleum is able to meet our customers total business and convenience retails needs; from bulk fuel and lubricants to spray oils and solvents; from dispensing equipment to convenience groceries.

"We're proud to distribute the full range of BP fuels and lubricants as well as the full range of Castrol lubricants. BP and Castrol are recognised around the World for their commitment to creating excellent products and for their environmental and social responsibilities."

Reliance Petroleum is able to deliver the highest quality retail offer to customers in regional Australia through the 2go shops which offer a wide range of convenience retail products as well as food and car wash (in selected sites).

The new business is also able to offer an expanded customer card offer. The Reliance Card is a business friendly, convenient charge card that allows you to purchase fuels and shop items at any Reliance Petroleum or BP service station Australia wide.
